

The Northwind and the Sun: An Ayeri Translation, Revisited

1 A Few Introductory Remarks

The Aesopian fable, “The North Wind and the Sun,” was one of the first texts – if not the first text – I translated into Ayeri, back in 2004. Ayeri was still very young then and looked a little different from today. Just compare a sentence from the old translation (i) to its current reinterpretation (ii):

- (i) “Viarilea ang macubriyañ Temihin nusatyō nay Perinin, sang luga samnoea ang engongiyānin numicyo, nay edauiyēa loasanoin ang masahaiyē sasanoea, sang manaiconisaiyē cong metovaea eimato.” (Becker 2004: 1)

The updated version of the Ayeri text which I am presenting here has been translated completely from scratch. Whereas I used a rendering of the text in German as the basis of my 2004 version, I am now using the English translation as provided by the Handbook of the International Phonetic Association, which has some notoriety as a parallel text in the linguistics community (see e.g. Cysouw and Wälchli 2007: 97). As in previous write-ups on translating texts into Ayeri, I will progress through the text sentence by sentence. The translated sentences will be broken down by interlinear annotation, and I will comment on passages in terms of structural or lexical details that caught my attention while translating them.

2 The Text in English

The North Wind and the Sun were disputing which was the stronger, when a traveler came along wrapped in a warm cloak. They agreed that the one who first succeeded in making the traveler take his cloak off should be considered stronger than the other. Then the North Wind blew as hard as he could, but the more he blew the more closely did the traveler fold his cloak around him; and at last the North Wind gave up the attempt. Then the Sun shined out warmly, and immediately the traveler took off his cloak. And so the North Wind was obliged to confess that the Sun was the stronger of the two. (International Phonetic Association 2007: ???)

3 (Re-)Attempting an Ayeri Translation

We have already seen the newly translated version of the first sentence of the text above, but I will repeat it here again:

- (1) Ang manga ranyon adauyi Pintemis nay Perin, engyo mico sinyāng ton, lingya si lugaya asāyāng si sitang-naykonyāng kong tova ya mato.

Ang manga ran -yon adauyi Ø= Pintemis nay Ø= Perin, eng -yo mico who -A 3PL.GEN, while-LOC REL pass-3SG.M traveler-A REL self= wrap -3SG.M.A

kong tova -ya mato.
 inside cloak-LOC warm.

‘The North Wind and the Sun were then arguing which of them is stronger, all the while a traveler passed by who had wrapped himself in a warm cloak.’

The 2004 version here uses a verb in the first clause, ꠘꠞꠤ: kubra- ‘quarrel’, which I rendered as ꠘꠞꠤ: ran- ‘argue’ here. It may be noted that ꠘꠞꠤ: kubra- still exists, however, the dictionary gives it as ‘get into a conflict’ these days, without further explanation. Like in my translation of a medieval deed (Becker 2015: 9), I rendered the “when” clause not just with the plain preposition ꠘꠞꠤ: ling ‘on (top of), while’ used as a temporal adverb, but as a preposition proper with the complement rendered as a relative clause, so literally this ꠘꠞꠤ: lingya si means ‘on top, where ...’, though in context it might be better translated back into English as ‘all the while (that)’.

- (2) Sakantong, engongyo mico danyās palung menanang sirī ang pahongya asāya tovaley yana.

‘They agreed that the first one due to whom the traveller would take off his cloak would be stronger than the other.’

I think that this sentence at least counters the claim that stories like this one would “deliberately evade complex linguistic constructions” (Cysouw and Wälchli 2007: 97). In the English version, it is pretty complex in containing a subject noun phrase that contains a relative clause that in turn contains a causative construction which gets nominalized, which is then followed by a verb phrase containing a verb whose complement is formed by a predicative noun phrase which consists of a comparative construction. This combines all of the things that Ayeri is ridiculously baroque about, which is why I could not just translate the English sentence in a very straightforward way, but had to rephrase things a little. The success brought about by making the traveler take off his cloak is thus implied by context in my Ayeri translation.

There is an article on my blog that deals with correlative conjunctions in Ayeri (Becker 2012), but unfortunately, it leaves out a discussion of strategies to deal with ‘as ... as ...’ and ‘the ... the ...’. I racked my brain for a while and came to the conclusion that I could as well paraphrase the respective passages.¹ I suppose that it could be possible to shoehorn the ‘blew as hard as he could’ part into a
